

Experience report: Studying “International Information Systems”

IIS 3rd semester: Olivia Meisohle

Does the course meet your expectations?

Yes, my expectations have definitely been met. I wanted to study something that would take me further in business and programming, but at the same time expand my language skills, as learning foreign languages has long been a passion of mine. I was able to do this thanks to the wide range of courses on the degree program.

What content do you particularly like?

I like programming the most, as it encourages creative and problem-solving thinking, which I really enjoy. In addition, the content of the lectures and the languages used are very future-oriented. There are also group projects in some courses, which I find very good, as it is helpful to work together on new topics and you can also gain a lot of experience in teamwork in general.

Why did you choose Augsburg as a place to study?

Augsburg is a very beautiful city that has a lot to offer, especially for students. I like the fact that there is always something going on, but you can find your way around very quickly due to its size. In addition, the university and, above all, the degree course appealed to me directly, which ultimately made the decision easy.

Do you receive valuable support during your studies?

You get a lot of support during your studies. There is a lot of networking, especially within the IIS degree program, even among the different semesters. This is very helpful, as you can always contact other students who have often been in the same situation.

You also have a lot of contact with the professors and coordinators, which means you always get a quick answer to questions about content and study-related issues.

How do you experience the cultural diversity on the Bachelor's degree course in International Information Systems?

The international aspect is what I love most about the degree program. Rarely do you have the opportunity to exchange ideas with people from different cultures, learn together and simply make contacts. The cultural diversity is what makes the course so special.
